

Animal Transportation Association (ATA) new website debuts

May 10th, 2010

Participants at the ATA's annual conference in Fort Lauderdale, Florida May 9 – 12, 2010 got the first peak at the new ATA website www.animaltransportationassociation.org. Many months in the making, the new website offers a fresh, one stop website for everything animal transport.

The open access side of the webpage provides the public with general information on shipping animals of all species by all modes of transport. Everything you may need to transport animals, including shippers, forwarders, brokers, animal attendants, insurers and transportation consultants can all be located through the on-line directory. Links to government regulations, access to past ATA conference proceedings and breaking news is easily accessible and up to date.

Along with the open public pages, ATA members will have access to past webinar presentations, animal transportation research library and committee reports. Memberships can be renewed, contact/company information updated and the upcoming "Best Practices for Animal Transportation" (Fall 2010) will be available.

Organized in 1976, The Animal Transportation Association, is a non-profit association dedicated to the safe and humane transportation of animals — worldwide. ATA's members comprise the entire spectrum of those concerned with the transportation of animals ... Airlines, Truckers & Shipping Firms; Government Agencies throughout the world; Universities & Research Organizations; Breeders; Importers/Exporters and Veterinarians.
